

A study on language education to explore “how we live together”

FUKUSHIMA, Seiji*

Abstract

In the context of nation-states, language education serves the creation of national unity and identity through the promotion of the “national” language, which is an ethnic symbol. However, the globalization is making the world borderless and weakening the nation-state regime. Present society has become more complex, multiethnic, and multilingual. In this period of structural changes in society, we have to explore “how we live together” and develop language education to create a common space.
